

anthropological archives. The editors conclude, "The overwhelming view seems to be to maintain Teocentli essentially as it has been in the past..."

Many of us who read Teocentli are glad that it has not grown to equal the membership of the Society for American Archaeology—it would be a burden to read rather than a pleasure. Many who write for it enjoy the stimulus of looking back once a year and informally summarizing their recent successes (and failures) for communication to a circle of friends and colleagues. It is a unique publication, long-lived because it fills a significant communication niche.
