David W. Phillipson is the first Professor of African Archaeology to be appointed at any UK university. His inaugural lecture, Archaeology in Africa and in Museums, given on 22 October 2002 was published in late 2003 by Cambridge University Press.

David Phillipson also wrote a biographical memoir of John Desmond Clark (1916–2002) in the Proceedings of the British Academy 120:65–79 (2003).

Mitchell, Peter 2002 The Archaeology of Southern Africa. Cambridge University Press. [This exhaustive review of southern African archaeology contains a relatively short section on the history of research, but includes a massive 71-page bibliography with more than 1500 references.]

Coy, Fred. E. Jr. 2003 Garrick Mallery The Man. La Pintura (the official newsletter of the American Rock Art Research Association) 30(2): 8–13. [Mallery undertook pioneering research on North American pictographs while associated with the Bureau of Ethnology in the late nineteenth century.]

Schlanger, Nathan 2003 The Burkitt affair revisited. Colonial implications and identity politics in early South African prehistoric research. Archaeological Dialogues 10(1): 5–26.

In response to Schlanger, there are the following papers:

Dubow, Saul 2003 Opération coup de poing. Archaeological Dialogues 10(1): 26–32.

Shepherd, Nick 2003 The modest violet. Response to ‘The Burkitt affair revisited’. Archaeological Dialogues 10(1): 33–39.

And then a rejoinder by Schlanger:

The same issue of this journal also contains an interview with Leo Klejn:

Immonen, Visa 2003 The stratigraphy of a life. An archaeological dialogue with Leo Klejn. Archaeological Dialogues 10(1): 57–75.

From the bibliography for the Schlanger dialogue, I also note:
